

The NAB does not have the right to decide what I pay to hear. If they have something better on a local station, if I can find one that has pertinent information in an area that I am not familiar with, I would listen to it. I travel from time to time and finding a station with proper local information in an area that I've never been to is time consuming and difficult. XM offers me the ability to pick the station for the area I'm in and instantly get what I need when I need it. If people did not want this service XM would not spend the money to bring it to them, therefore the NAB needs to get together with its' group to bring forth a proper competition rather than just squashing our rights. The broadcast associations are the first to cry about freedom of speech and freedom of the press until it doesn't go their way, then suddenly it's wrong. I think they're wrong and need to be told so.
